Duolingo Soars Past $1 Billion Revenue, Powered by AI

Duolingo raised its 2025 revenue forecast to an impressive $1.01–1.02 billion, exceeding expectations. This surge is driven by its AI-powered Super and Max subscription tiers featuring chatbot video calls, personalized error insights, and rapid content generation. In just one year, AI helped launch 148 new courses, boosting engagement and margins.

OpenAI Makes GPT-5 a Reality —Another Leap Toward AGI

OpenAI officially released GPT-5, boasting breakthroughs in math, science, and coding. A standout feature: "vibe coding", which lets users generate software through natural language prompts. The release comes with safety measures to mitigate misuse. The company now serves 700 million weekly active users and projects a $20 billion valuation by year-end. This advancement brings us closer to true AGI.

JPMorgan's AI Tools Drive Sales Amid Market Volatility

During April 2025's market turmoil, JPMorgan lean on its Coach AI toolkit to help advisors deliver personalized, timely client advice. These tools are used by more than half of its employees and generated $1.5 billion in cost savings, alongside a 20% boost in wealth-management sales year over year. It's a powerful example of AI as a stabilizing force: turning volatility into client growth and long-term value.

Agentic AI Adoption Growing Fast

Among early adopters, 30% already deploy agentic AI—systems that don't just respond to prompts but act autonomously within set goals. That number is expected to reach 48% by the end of 2025, driven by enterprise demand for automation that thinks and acts.

We're crossing the line from passive AI (that answers questions) to active AI (that takes initiative). Start by mapping tasks in your business that require logic but not creativity.
