Parloa Raises $350M to Scale GenAI Voice Agents

Parloa's $350M round at a $3B valuation underscores how quickly GenAI voice agents are reshaping customer support. Instead of scripted flows, Parloa's LLM-powered agents understand context across channels, adapt tone, handle multi-step reasoning, and integrate with CRM and knowledge systems.

Wikipedia Signs Paid Data Licensing Deals With Microsoft & Meta

The Wikimedia Foundation formalized paid licensing agreements allowing its content to be used for training generative AI models. This signals a clear shift in the AI ecosystem: high-quality, human-curated datasets are becoming premium training assets, replacing the era of “free scraping” with contractual access and revenue.

Google Introduces UCP, that Lets AI Agents Shop for Consumers

Google’s announcement of the Universal Commerce Protocol (UCP) marks a structural shift in how digital commerce will operate. The protocol allows AI agents to coordinate everything from product discovery to checkout across partners like Target, Shopify, Etsy, and Walmart all without requiring shoppers to manually navigate websites or apps. This means the “front door” of commerce is moving from traditional marketplaces to AI assistant surfaces

WEF: Data Readiness Is Now a CEO-Level Priority

The World Economic Forum warns that most organizations are not data-ready, and that generative AI amplifies rather than masks underlying data problems. Inaccurate, inconsistent, or biased data can cascade into flawed AI-driven decisions in personalization, pricing, inventory, or risk scoring.

The message: data quality is no longer an IT hygiene task. It is a board-level risk and competitive differentiator.
