HARVARD RESEARCH SHOWS GEN AI RESHAPING WHITE-COLLAR WORK

Harvard Business School research published March 4 provides empirical evidence that generative AI is "reshaping, not uniformly erasing, white-collar work." The study analyzed employment patterns following mainstream AI adoption, countering extreme predictions. Companies integrating AI across workflows report 15-40% productivity gains in knowledge work—but only in organizations with systematic training. Providing AI access without training delivers minimal impact.

IBM PREDICTS 2026 AS YEAR OF TEAM WORKFLOW ORCHESTRATION

IBM's 2026 AI trend analysis identifies three shifts: AI moving from individual usage to team/workflow orchestration, evolving from passive assistants to active collaborators with reasoning, and democratization of agent creation moving beyond developers to business users. IBM also notes 2026 marks first time quantum computing outperforms classical on specific problems—unlocking drug development, materials science, financial optimization breakthroughs.
